Benedictum Nomen Mariae

Her name is like the rain-perfumèd air
 Of summer on a lost and winsome day:
 I breathe it and am free of every care,
 I say it and want nothing more to say.

Her name is laden like the honeycomb
 Whose sweetness penetrates the yielding depth
 Of all my soul, and, like the thought of home,
 To think on her consoles and eases breath.

Her intercessions lift the weight of sin,
 And just as wax doth melt before the flame,
 Or as a frown dissolves into a grin,
 All darkness flees before her holy name.

Maria! Be thy name at life's eclipse
 The final sound that leaves my dying lips
