The Duty of Parents to Instruct

“Parents are under grave obligation to see to the religious and moral education of their children...” (Canon Law) The Christian education of your children imposes four duties on you – instruction, vigilance, correction and good example. Instruction, the foundation of the other duties, embraces the duty of teaching them the basics of Christian doctrine (what they are to believe, practice), and that of training them to piety and devotion.

As their reason and judgment develop you should try to explain to them the meaning of the fundamental truths of religion. You may invoke the help of a priest or teacher, but you can never completely shift your burden on to them. No one can convey instruction to your children so efficaciously and with such good results as you, because of your greater authority over them, and because of the facilities afforded you by our ceaseless, intimate contact. Easy and short lessons given opportunely from time to time during your ordinary household occupations will prove much more profitable to your children than extensive instructions received elsewhere. Make it your business to be instructed, both for your own sake and for that of your children. In the meantime, be at least careful to send them to catechism.

Training Their Hearts

The training of the heart should begin from in their tenderest years. Teach them that man’s true glory and greatness consist in loving God and observing His commandments. In short, take advantage of every occasion to give them good advice.

This does not mean that you are to weary or repel them by continually preaching. Short observations, a few general maxims naturally suggested by the circumstances of your daily life, will suffice to enable your children to take them in little by little, and to acquire virtuous inclinations.

To these good maxims must be united corresponding practices. You should accustom your children to pray every morning and evening, teaching them certain prayers, habituating them to recite them regularly, while seeing that they properly receive the sacraments according to their age and capacity.

Good principles, once grasped, are never completely forgotten; they may be hidden out of sight under the heat and violence of the passions; but completely destroyed – never. Such principles can hardly fail to excite remorse of conscience, which is often enough to lead back to the right path.

But, if ignorance is found along with vices and bad habits, we may almost say that the evil is almost without a remedy. Such a person’s sins without remorse, and without remorse he remains, no matter what the circumstances. What hope can you have of saving him? This single reflection should make you more alive to the importance and the necessity of sparing no pains to lay in the heart of your children the good foundation of Christian knowledge and Christian principles.
